Different Types of Corrosion – Recognition, Mechanisms & Prevention Pitting Corrosion Recognition What is pitting corrosion? Pitting Corrosion is the localized corrosion of a metal surface confined to a point or small area, that takes the form of cavities. Pitting is one of the most damaging forms of corrosion.

Different Types of Corrosion

Galvanic corrosion, or dissimilar metal corrosion, occurs when two different metals are located together in a corrosive electrolyte. A galvanic couple forms between the two metals, where one metal becomes the anode and the other the cathode.

Eight Forms of Corrosion by: Fontana & Greene, 1967 The idea of describing the various ways corrosion can damage metals by its appearance had been used by many before Fontana and Greene coauthored their famous book in 1967. McKay and Worthington were already discussing various forms of corrosion in their 1936 book on corrosion. following Alan Pollitt in his own book published thirteen years sooner ...

The important point is to understand that a variety of corrosion mechanisms can be caused by different combinations of factors and corrective procedures are widely varied. Reference. 1 C.P. Dillon, Forms of Corrosion: Recognition and Prevention (Houston, TX: NACE, 1982).

Microbiologically Influenced Corrosion in Fire Sprinkler

Galvanic corrosion or "Bimetallic Corrosion" or "Dissimilar Metal Corrosion", as sometimes called, is defined as the accelerated corrosion of a metal because of an electrical contact (including physical contact) with a more noble metal or nonmetallic conductor (the cathode) in a corrosive electrolyte.

Different Forms of Corrosion: Galvanic Corrosion

Erosion corrosion is the result of a combination of an aggressive chemical environment and high fluid-surface velocities. Dealloying. Dealloying is a rare form of corrosion found in copper alloys, gray cast iron, and some other alloys.

Most of the other forms of corrosion are insidious in nature and they are considerably more difficult to predict. They are the forms that cause unexpected or premature failures and consequent headaches for the management. 2. Intergranular Corrosion consists of selective or localized attack at the boundaries of the metallic crystals.

General corrosion is the most common form of corrosion and is also called uniform corrosion where the electrochemical reactions (in aqueous or atmospheric media) proceed uniformly over the entire exposed metal surface over a large area.
