strange." Then he looks round like a man waking up. "Now she has gone and I am here alone. Only to think I might be travelling with her at this very moment I That would be all I could wish for at present. To go south, to the sunshine, and to be with her for two whole days. Then, later on, to see her every day . . . and the sea and the mountains . . .

This book is a collection of anecdotes from both his youth and adult life which exhibits his technical mind. One strange paragraph appears in this book, where Tesla makes the claim that the world will know peace when the races of man merge together and that there is in fact just one race, of many colours.
